

A GENERAL STATE OF THE
WHITEHAVEN DISPENSARY,
For the Year 1792.

THAT CHARITY, exciting SENSATIONS
and REFLECTIONS highly pleasing and sa- tisfactory, is the best Tribute of GRATITUDE, for the many invaluable Blessings we possess, must be universally acknowledged. Through the Medium of this INSTITUTION it will effectually alleviate the most cogent Calamities of Human Life, and sooth the much to be deplored Woes of those who suffer the combined and exquisite In felicities of Penury and Disease:—pathetically sympathizing with, it can certainly relieve them.

Perhaps no Motive will more persuasively attract the Attention of the Opulent, than that arising from the anxious Recollection of those Periods of Pain and Solitude which they themselves, their nearest Relatives, or dearest Friends, have repeatedly experienced: and which, as the common Lot of Man, especially occurring to Objects deprived of the Means qualified to render such a Situation in any Degree supportable, claims their affectionate Commiseration and liberal Beneficence. Whilst they thus afford Stability and Permanency to this ENDOWMENT, extending its benign and salutary Influence to numerous Species of Distress, and with the utmost Efficacy its Funds can admit, the essential Duties and sublime Delights of HUMANITY (Tests and Rewards of genuine, disinterested Benevolence) are amply fulfilled, and poignantly gratified.

THE primary and important Engagements of this DISPENSARY may now properly suggest a few brief Observations, applicable to the necessitous Condition of its Objects, the DISORDERS they suffered, and the Means variously, yet we trust usefully, adapted to their Relief and Recovery.

The contagious Diseases which required the Aids of this MEDICAL CHARITY, at the Termination of the last Year, were singularly mild and favourable, admitting an Apprehension of Danger in one solitary Instance. Of the few since recommended, two unhappily proved fatal Cases. The first, previously debilitated, had made a late Application, and the other would not immediately obey the proper Directions. To interrupt their general Communication, as occurring in confined and populous Districts, formerly liable to the baneful Prevalency of such Fevers, every precautive and preventive Attention to Cleanliness, Ventilation, and well authenticated Antidotes, especially those of recently prepared White-wash, the Effluvia of Tar and Explosion of Gun-powder, became absolutely necessary; and fortunately, executed assiduously, were effectually successful.

Influenced by Motives in our Acceptation highly eligible, in several adjacent Situations peculiarly disposed to suffer the Ravages of similar epidemic Disorders, a diligent igent Observance of the above Injunctions has proved equally salutary, conducing most beneficially to the PUBLIC WEAL. We can, consequently, felicitate this Country, and especially the Promoters of this Establishment, on the perfect Eradication of a pestilential Calamity which has long very distressfully and fatally annoyed it.

The moist and cold State of the Weather, in the early Part of the Summer, had been succeeded by a Degree of Heat equal, if not superior, to any ever remembered in this Climate. It was unexpectedly of short Duration, excessive and long continued Rains again prevailing: At this Period, no acute Malady of any Importance obtained. In the Autumn, and Beginning of the Winter, a very trivial febrile Influenza took Place. This Complaint, which generally diffused its Influence, was remarkably aggravated, if not excited, by accidental Exposure to Cold: chiefly distinguished by the governable and transient Symptoms of inflammatory Catarrh, it rarely permitted medical Assistance, readily yielding to the occasional Employment of domestic Pectorals, and the Indulgence of moderate Perspiration.

When, however, a consumptive Tendency could be probably suspected, agreeably to the judicious Sentiment of practical Writers, or even a latent Propensity to internal inflammatory Affections prevailed, it certainly induced very very alarming Circumstances of Disease, and solicited the most immediate and potent professional Attentions, to prevent impending Danger, and avert Consequences too oft inevitably fatal.

The deplorable Events of a similar catarrhal Epidemic, in 1781, confirm the Validity of this Assertion.

The only other interesting Disorder was an Affection of the Head and Breast, which obtained in the Spring. It occurred chiefly to young People, and though mostly accompanied with a considerable Degree of Fever, was rarely of more than six Days Duration. Diluents, Antimonials, Aperients, and a strict antiphlogistic Regimen, were the sole curative Expedients.

With Regard to the chronic Infirmities and Maladies of the Indigent, though it is seldom in our Power to perfectly remove them, we have frequently the Satisfaction to mitigate their Violence, interrupt their Progress, or obviate their Tendency and Effects. These Observations peculiarly apply to the unhappy Condition of our numerous surgical Cases, in which not only sagacious Discernment is required, but also the regular Administration of internal and external Remedies. Perhaps in few Respects can the Utility of this CHARITY be more assuredly evinced than in those Benefits which Objects of this Description thus derive from it: their Circumstances being in a great Measure totally inadequate to procure a constant and sufficient Supply of the requisite very expensive Articles. With Gratitude they now acknowledge, that since the Establishment of this DISPENSARY, the frugal Necessaries of Life are obtained with less Difficulty, and their Situation thereby happily rendered much more comfortable.

The Proportion of these Cases has this last Year admitted a considerable Increase, especially the incurable dropsical Ones. Every requisite Attention was assiduously paid them by the Gentleman now in Connection with the Surgeon, to whom they were particularly remitted, and whose late powerful and tedious Indisposition we very sincerely deplore and regret.

Extraordinary Cases have occasionally received most judicious Regard. The Aids of Midwifery were remarkably successful, only two Instances of Fatality appearing upon a List of 832 Patients, commencing January the 9th, 1786.

We have repeatedly announced, with grateful Respect, the Obligations conferred by the ingenious REGISTER of the ROYAL HUMANE SOCIETY, in frequently communicating useful Sentiments and Publications relative to the distressful Subject of Interrupted Animation. These are still very regularly and liberally continued, though fortunately no accidental circumstance of it has lately required them. To perceive the rapid and beneficial ficial Progress and Effects of this meritorious Establishment, must prove a Source of most exalted Pleasure to the Man of Humanity. Its restorative Measures, originally confined to Cases of Suffocation from Drowning, have been since varied and extended to those of Strangulation, or wherever the Principle of Vitality appears to be, by any Means, manifestly suspended. At first proposed by the celebrated Doctors COGAN and HAWES, (1774) in the Metropolis of this Kingdom, we find its benignant Influence diffused to the remotest Countries, exciting the studious Attention of Practitioners to an Inquiry of the highest National Importance: and from which it is hoped this additional Branch of Medical Science will deduce considerable Improvement.

The Liberality of the original Benefaction, annual Subscriptions, and voluntary Donations, particularly that of this DISPENSARY, have hitherto enabled the Directors to amply fulfil its various salutary Intentions, and at the same Time had been expected to lay the Foundation for future and more effectual Modes of extending its Benefits: We are, however, sorry to observe, that to perfectly accomplish these highly eligible Purposes, new Contributions should be solicited; the much regretted Death and Removal of many valuable Subscribers, with several deplorably unfortunate Contingencies, rendering this Expedient in every Regard certainly necessary.

The

The PATRONS and PROTECTORS of this INSTITUTION are most sincerely wished a permanent Continuance of that Health and Comfort their laudable Generosity effectually affords its Objects. May “ the Luxury of doing Good,” as it has been emphatically styled, (unquestionably the highest) long be theirs; and the numerous Modes of Beneficence, so pre-eminently distinguishing this Age and Nation, which graciously provide an Asylum for the Necessities and Diseases of the Indigent, ever obtain supreme Estimation. They will, consequently, procure a Reward in present most refined Satisfaction and future reversionary Felicity, infinitely superior to any human Power or Wealth can bestow.

Finally, may they, with Zeal and Liberality, variously and efficaciously exercise the sublime, celestial Virtue of CHRISTIAN BENEVOLENCE; and, “BLESSING OTHERS, BE COMPLETELY-BLEST.”
